Clipping path (Add Color, Drop Shadow, etc.) Photoshop Elements' clipping path is a special kind of mask that is used to isolate an area of an image from the rest of the image. You can use it to create effects like adding a drop shadow, adding a border, or creating text outlines. Clipping paths also have the advantage of being safer because they can be shared between many images, even if the original images weren't made in Photoshop Elements. You've Got the Stuff (film) You've Got the Stuff () is a 1964 Spanish comedy film directed by Fernando Colomo. It was the first of two films that both star actor Antonio Gades. The film's tagline is "La vida es una canción", which translates as "Life is a song". Plot While Pedro, a pianist, is on holiday in Seville in southern Spain, his brother-in-law Ramón gets him some work. The brothers have a musical evening and Ramón falls madly in love with Pedro's piano, so much so that he buys it back home in Spain for a large sum of money. In a short while, he hears Pedro is in trouble with the police, and has to return the expensive piano to its rightful owner (Pedro), who will then use it to mime a song, to the tune of his brother-in-law's playing of it. We should work to make sure it's safe to do so. The study recommends that anyone who is found to be suicidal should be advised of treatment resources to help them through the process. If a person dies by suicide, the document recommends that this should be deemed as a health-care related death. It also suggests ways to better assess mental health and substance abuse problems. It doesn't endorse suicide. Some proponents of suicide as a
